-  Correct Usage of “Besides” as an Adverb:
 - I’m not going to the party. Besides, I wasn’t even invited.
 - (“Besides” adds a reason or extra information.)
 - NOTE: “Besides” as an adverb means in addition to that, not in spite of.

 - She’s already very busy. Besides, she’s not interested in taking on more work.
- I wouldn’t want to live in that area. Besides, the rent is too high.
 - Note: Even though “rent” is a noun here, it doesn’t make “besides” a preposition.
 - Why? Because “besides” is not directly modifying or referring to “rent”.
 - It’s acting as an adverb—linking the previous idea (“I wouldn’t want to live in that area”) with the additional reason (“the rent is too high”).

- Correct and Incorrect Usage:

Traumatic events can leave indelible marks on the psyche, requiring long-term emotional support and therapy.
